The Snider Riffs. From the " Times."

The merits or demerits of the new Snider rifle just issued to the Army were briefly discussed in the House of Lords last week, and have since been explained by General Peel to the House of of course, to put a notice in the Gazette to the Commons. Lord De Grey expressed the public misgivings on the subject when he saked the Under Secretary for War whether the conversion of the Enfield rifles into breechloaders on Mr. Snider's principle had failed, as was reported, to give us an efficient weapon. Lord Longford replied that the reports in question were exaggerated, and that the only defects discovered by the practice of the troops with the new rifle, were certain small imperfections in the cartridges, and in the "mecha nism of the arm." These, he thought, could be easily remedied without damage to the principle of the invention. But, meanwhile, while this system of things and he produced the report of the General comviews.
